FOOTNOTES

[1] Hilary Minc, A Fruitful Collaboration of Free Peoples, quoted after Pravda, Moscow, by Zycie Gospodarcze (Economic Life), Warsaw, 1951, No. 19. Minc states that, in comparison with 1938, the total industrial output in the first half of 1951 reached 165 percent in Czechoslovakia, 208 percent in Rumania, 268 percent in Poland, 273 percent in Hungary and 335 percent in Bulgaria, while that of Albania reached 423 percent in 1950. The 1938 level of the industrial output in the Soviet zone of Germany was exceeded towards the end of 1950, and by the middle of 1951 might have reached 115 percent of the 1938 production.

[3] No detailed exact figures of the coal output in the Silesian-Ostravan basin can be given. It is not easy to distinguish it statistically from the global data of output in Poland and Czechoslovakia, both of which have coal mines outside of that basin. The annual and long-range plans of all captive countries are based only upon such global data and do not make distinction between the production of individual basins.

[4] Hungarian, Rumanian and Bulgarian statistics do not make sufficient distinction between black and brown coal. Figures concerning the coal output in these three countries are estimated according to the ratio between the output of the two kinds of coal as known from previous statistics. That ratio is supposed to be constant.

[5] During the third quarter of 1951 the plan for coal extraction in Eastern Germany was not entirely fulfilled, yet output increased by 11.5 percent in comparison with the corresponding quarter of 1950 (Wirtschaft, Berlin, 1951, No. 43). The minor Czech coal basins were by the end of September 1951, about 150,000 tons, i.e., some 3 or 4 percent behind the prescribed target (speech by Premier Zápotocký, Rude Pravo, Prague, 1 November 1951). The Hungarian coal and lignite mines were 6 percent behind the plan for the second quarter of 1951, and 10 percent behind that for the third quarter (Nepszava, Budapest, 23 October 1951); yet an official report claimed that in the second quarter of 1951 the output of both black and brown coal exceeded by 22 percent that of the second quarter of 1950 (Gospodarka Planowa, Warsaw, 1951, No. 9); the Tatabánya black coal mines were responsible for almost half the coal deficit (speech by Rakosi, Nepszava, 23 October 1951). In Rumania the situation was apparently somewhat

Karl Kühn (Wirtschaft, Berlin, 1951, No. 18) stated that Leuna could produce much more gasoline in 1950, because the installed capacity would permit such production, but that nitrogen-making had priority.
